

Machine Learning and Data Analytics

Machine learning is a subset of artificial intelligence that focuses on building systems which can learn from data. It allows computers to improve their performance without explicitly being programmed.

In modern industries, machine learning is widely used for fraud detection, recommendation systems, predictive maintenance, and natural language processing.